

Phytobiophysics Plants Vibrational Formulas in Supporting Cancer

Synopsis

A new area of research has grounded a philosophy of light and colour within the body into a medical science of anatomy, physiology and pathology. We are all aware that the brain sends messages around the body via electrical impulses but it is less likely that you perceive your organs as having an electrical frequency of their own which is the wavelength of a specific colour. However, a ground-breaking area of medical research measures the electrical frequency of diseased tissue and bacteria cultures and compares this to the frequencies of healthy tissue in each organ. These correspond to the wavelength of different colours of the spectrum, such as those that can be found in nature. Phytobiophysics has created a system of restoring harmony to the emotions and spirit through flower formulas whose colours match the wavelengths of a healthy mind and body.
